Mr. Rodney E. Hood
Acting Comptroller
U.S. Office of the Comptroller of the Currency
400 7th St. SW
Washington, D.C. 20219

Dear Mr. Hood:

The Committee on Oversight and Government Reform is investigating the improper debanking of individuals and entities based on political viewpoints or involvement in certain industries such as cryptocurrency and blockchain. Specifically, the Committee is focused on whether the actions are self-initiated by financial institutions or done at the direction of government regulators. On January 24, 2025, the Committee wrote to leaders in the blockchain and crypto spaces seeking information about their experiences of debanking.<sup>1</sup> On February 27, 2025, the Committee wrote to Acting Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) Chairman Travis Hill, requesting documents and communications concerning digital asset corporations and associations who have spoken publicly about debanking.<sup>2</sup> The FDIC's response was highly informative and showed the ways in which regulators, primarily under the previous administration, stifled American innovation and competitiveness. The Committee has similar questions for the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), the agency that charters national banks,<sup>3</sup> to better understand its enforcement approach with respect to large financial institutions.

On February 5, 2025, the FDIC, the primary federal regulator of state-chartered community banks (those with assets of less than $10 billion<sup>4</sup>) and a growing number of regional banks<sup>5</sup> (those with assets between $10 billion and $100 billion<sup>6</sup>) released a document containing voluminous redacted correspondence between the agency and certain financial institutions which sought to engage, or did engage, in “crypto-related activities.”<sup>7</sup> According to the FDIC, 64 of these documents include “correspondence with the 24 banks that received ‘pause letters,’” and 111 documents consist of FDIC correspondence and records pertaining to crypto-related activities of other regulated institutions.<sup>8</sup> In a press release, the FDIC conceded its pattern of hostility and deflection toward crypto-related activities:

requests from these banks were almost universally met with resistance, ranging from repeated requests for further information, to multi-month periods of silence as institutions waited for responses, to directives from supervisors to pause, suspend, or refrain from expanding all crypto- or blockchain-related activity. Both individually and collectively, these and other actions sent the message to banks that it would be extraordinarily difficult—if not impossible to move forward. As a result, the vast majority of banks simply stopped trying.<sup>9</sup>

The Committee examined a voluminous amount of FDIC’s responses and communications in unredacted form regarding crypto-related business proposals which raised serious concerns about transparency and consistency of enforcement.

As the FDIC review appeared focused on small institutions and did not include many of the nation’s largest banks which whistleblowers have identified during our investigation, the Committee seeks the OCC’s assistance to better understand your enforcement approach of larger financial institutions under your supervision. As the OCC is the primary regulator of banks chartered under the National Bank Act<sup>10</sup>—specifically the nation’s largest banks with assets between $50 billion and $3 trillion<sup>11</sup>—the Committee seeks information about the OCC’s enforcement of financial institution’s interest and expansion into crypto and crypto-related businesses. Accordingly, the Committee seeks the OCC’s communications with financial institutions surrounding their issuance of Interpretive Letter 1179.<sup>12</sup> Prior to the OCC’s March 7, 2025, rescission of Interpretive Letters governing bank authority to engage in crypto-activity, the OCC had required its member banks to receive supervisory nonobjection and to demonstrate to the OCC adequate controls before engaging in crypto-activity.<sup>13</sup> The Committee seeks to better understand the strategy, consistency, and impact of the OCC’s enforcement.
